acclaimed book about the Iraq war written by a soldier, "My War: Killing Time in Iraq," winner of the 2007 Lulu Blooker Prize. In the next edition of my column, I'll describe the military's reaction to Buzzell's blog, and comment on the relevance of soldiers' blogs and the role that non-journalists can play in disseminating information otherwise bypassed by conventional sources.

MY WAR

King David defeated the Philistines by following God's strategy concerning the battle (2 Samuel 5:23–25). God never tells people to sin, so the Israelites who followed God's commands to wage war were not sinning. Killing in war cannot be equated with murder. This is not to say that killing in war has no effects.

My War : NPR

I recently finished reading Colby Buzzell's My War - Killing Time in Iraq. It's being billed as something between "Catch 22" and "Dispatches". Well, while Buzzell writes cynically about some of the missions, the soldiers, and the Iraqis, it's easy to see that he really cares about them, too. This dichotomy is the very definition of Colby Buzzell.
